First Son—(Looking at Father and Mother) Now dear angels, will you join me in singing.

Mother—Yes, dear children, we shall be glad to. Our Hebrew songs are so beautiful. It is a tragedy that in so many Jewish homes ragtime has taken the place of Hebrew melody.

Second Son—Then let us join together.

(All sing Shabbas song.)

Father—This song is indeed glorious, and is bound to make an excellent impression on the Sabbath angels. Now Herbert, we are ready to hear the story.

First Son—On Friday night from Shul to our home, two angels escort us, the Angel of Peace and the Angel of Strife. When they enter our home and find it well lighted, the table handsomely set like ours, Papa and Mama with pleasant faces and Sabbath song ringing in the air—the Peace Angel's face shines with Glory and blesses the home and says "So be it the coming Friday night." Then the Angel of Strife bends his head down under his black wing and with a groan says Amen. But when the home is found to be dark and dreary, father grouchy, mother sad, the children fighting and fussing the Angel of strife laughs out loudly, Ha! Ha! Ha! this is my home. "So be it the coming Friday night." And the good Angel of Peace hides his face and with painful voice answers, Amen.

Father—This is a wonderful story. I am sure in our home the Angel of Strife shall never find a place.

All Answer—Amen.
